Licensed to practice in Illinois

Tammie G Krauskopf has over 35 years of experience helping companies develop strategies to minimize duties and taxes, avoid penalties, and build strong compliance programs. She represents large and small companies across a range of industries, including consumer products, electronics, pharmaceuticals, and food production.

Her broad industry experience provides the background to assist companies in using foreign trade zones (FTZs) and bonded warehouses in the United States. She has also helped foreign governments negotiate bilateral free trade agreements (FTAs) with the United States. Tammie has handled numerous customs fraud and seizure cases, prior disclosures, protests, ruling requests, audits, and focused assessments, and has guided companies in the development of internal compliance programs and standard operating procedures. She has extensive experience helping companies address import issues, including valuation, tariff classification, FTAs, duty drawback, trade security, C-TPAT, and country-of-origin determinations

WORK EXPERIENCE

Tammie was an adjunct professor at the University of Illinois in Chicago School of Law for 20 years where she taught U.S. Customs Import Law, Export Law, Trade and Development, and International Trade Law. Before forming her firm, Tammie spent nine years in private practice as counsel at Bryan Cave LLP and special counsel at Katten Muchin Rosenman LLP. She also spent 8 years as an attorney for the Dept. of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service (now the Department of Homeland Security, U.S. Customs and Border Protection), in both the Office of the Chief Counsel and the Office of Regulations and Rulings. Tammie was also a senior manager at Deloitte, developing the international trade practice for their Chicago office.
